f THE EVENING WORLD containing it was followed shortly by the service of a summons in an action for libel upon the publisher, in an action for libel upon the publisher, commenced by Dudley through his attorney. Col. George Bliss.

Col. Dudley claims that his reputation, which his political enemies in Indiana claim to be none of the best since his participation with Star Route Stephen W. Dorsey in the "soap" campaign of 1880, has been damaged by The Evening World's publication of this letter to the extent of $25,000.

Strangely enough, the Colonel does not explain wherein the letter complained of is a misrepresentation and a forgery which he has claimed, and the public is just as much in the dark, so far as Mr. Dudley is concerned, as to the contents of the letter which the Treasurer of the Republican National Committee in effect acknowledged sending, as ever.

But Col. Dudley declared that he would not answer any questions at all and went away declining to say another word.

These are the questions The Evening World wished to ask and which the reporter submitted to Col. Dudley:

1. Is your action for $85,000 damages for libet, brought against The World, bessed on the alleged letter by you as originally published, or on the alleged fac simile as printed on the front page of The Evening World of vesterday?

2. When will the complaint in your suit be served?

2. When will the complaint in your sain be served?

3. Will you kindly furnish THE EVENIMG WORLD for publication with a copy of the letter which you did write to the chairmen of the Indiana County Committees?

4 Will you furnish The Evening World with your corrections of the alleged fac simile of the latter as published yesterday?

5 Now that you have instituted an action for libel against The World, will you unbosem yourself to the people through The Evening World and state wherein you have been theiled by The World in either of its editions?

6 The World has left a blank space in its columns which it invites you to occupy with in explanation of your alleged correspondence. Will you give that explanation to the public through The Evening World?

"A Brass Monkey" is still doing a colossal busi-ness at the Bijou. The "Razzie Dazzie" tree in the third act is persistently and continuously en-cored each night, while the song and chorus in the last act, "There's no dies on Jasper," has made no less of a hit. An attempt will probably be made to prolong the run of "A Brass Monkey." "The Rivais." Sheridan's comedy will be continued during the coming week. The production is one of the events of the season, and everybody who appreciates a thoroughly excellent performance ought to see it.

"We, U.s. & Co.," a play that has enjoyed a long run in this city, is the attraction which H. R. Jacobs will offer to the patrons of the Tsalia Theatre next week. This farce comedy his been improved by the addition of new songs and specialties, and Monday night will be the first time it has been offered to the public at popular prices.

Edwin Arden, with his new play, "Barred Out," will be at H. H. Jacobs's Third Avenue Theatre next week. This will be Mr. Arden's last appearance in New York this season. The play was well received at the Thalia Theatre last week, and will presumably repeat its success uptown. An extra mattace will be given on Election Day.

"Philip Herne." Mrs. Mary Fiske's play, begins the last week of its long metropolitan run at the Standard Theatre Monday night. The play will then be sent on tour. Its business picked up very satisfactorily at the Standard Theatre. The part originally played by Joseph Haworth is now entrusted to Frederick Faulding. Joseph Wheelock still plays the part he had at first.

The Thatcher, Primrose and West minstrel organization begin an engagement at Niblo's on Rionday night. These popular fun-makers are sure of a cordial reception. Heined ministrelsy is as much appreciated as ever. This is the organization that is to be taken across the continent to San Francisco by Manager Al Hayman, of the Baidwin and California theatres.

The Chicago production of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" at the Star Theatre will enter upon the second and last week of its run at that house Monday night. The production has met with favor, as was predicted. It is a capital entertainment, though Shakespearian lovers may truly say that it has nineteenth century embellishments, it is beantifully staged.

"The Battle of Gettysburg" cyclorama at Fourth avenue and Nineteenth screet is still open to the public, and still enjoys considerable patronage. Manager T. M. Hill crops in very frequently, and seems to be quite satisfied with the success of his enterprise. The story of the battle, in book form, is now presented unity to visitors. It is an interesting little work.

"Germaniem and the Crucifixion," the cyclorama.

at Fifty-minth street and Madison avenue, has not yet lost any of its popularity. Since the reduction of the admission fee to 25 cents the paironage has increased considerably. The painting is one well worth seeing, and it is one that will do students of sacred history a great deal of good.

Dorrie's Big Dime Museum, at No. 351 Eighth avenue, which was opened to the public on Monday, seems to possess all the elements of popularity. It is in a populous neighborhood, and is certainly conspicuous. Mile hillie Christine, the two-headed girl, is the principal attraction. The Kohi and Middleton Chicago Specialty Company give hourig entertainments.

Worth's Falsce Museum in Rast Fourteenth street, just opposite Steinway Hail, has enjoyed a large patronage during the past week. The management do not allow the grass to grow beneath their feet. The attractions at the museum are numerous and ever changing. Jo-Jo, Big Eliza and Kil-Kil are curiosities that are well worth seeing.

Opposite the name of each voter appears the letter C. for Cleveland, H. for Harrison, P. for Prohibution or N. K., not known.

Every alternate N. K. is said also to be noted with an H., which is believed to indicate that the Republicans hope to purchase half of the voters whose preference is unknown by them.

The recurrence of the "N. K." and "H." notation is said to be most frequent in the downtown districts, where the Italians and Russian, Polish and Hungarian Hebrews are most numerous.

It is thought at Democratic Headquarters that this indicated a belief that money can be used to better advantage in these districts than elsewhere.

Election Day a special matince will be given, and in the evening the returns will be announced from the stage.

Rider Haggard's thrilling and remarkable story of "She" will be illustrated by living characters at the Lee Avenue Academy next week by william Gillette's combination of July one hundred dramatic and lyric artists. The scenery and effects are said to be unusually fine and realistic Miss Larra Clements, the young English actress, who achieved a triumph in the rôle of "She" last sean, will appear as Haggard's uncanny beroine. Extra Election Day matines. Returns read from the stage in the evoning.

Lydia Thompson and her troupe of British blondes will occupy the stage of the Academy of Music next week, presenting the tuneful burlesque "Penciope." Miss Thompson has surrounced herself with an efficient company, and the chorus is composed of a shapely collection of dameels who

"The Wages of Sin," presented by H. R. Jacoba's company, will be the attraction at Proctor's Brockyn Theatre next week, and crowded houses should be the rule at this popular house. Mr. Proctor's latest acquisition in the amusement line is the Worcester Theatre, Worcester, Mass., which he has leased for a term of ten years.

Manager Holmes, of Holmes's Museum, will present his patrons next week with the original 'Big Four" combination, who, in addition to their variety acts, will introduce a drama called "The Scout's Daughter." New curiosities are constantly being added to the museum ball.

Manager Gebhardt, of Zipp's Casino, will present a bill next week rich in novelties. The Steens, who recently made a hit at this place, will be seen ag-in in an entirely new programme, of which their second eight business is a wonderful feature. Armand Veszey, the cornetist, is becoming almost as popular with Casine audiences as is Minnie Schuit.

with a pause after each name. Two, at least, of those who had appeared at the gangway answered to their names without moving. At length the name of Louis Basard was called and he wont forward, and when he started these other two, who had tremblingly hesitated, followed. When the roll was finished forty men had gone to the forecastle, and there they stood, dogged and determined—at least so they tried to appear, though it was very evident that some of them wished they were safely out of the scrape, for there was danger to them in the look of the eagle-eyed chief.

The Commodore caused the marines to be

"Look ye," pursued the Commodore, drawing out his watch, "I will give you just one-hair minute—not one second more! In thirty seconds I shall fire! Now, report for duty, or stay where you are!"

Ferhaps five seconds passed, during which a stillness like the lush of death reigned upon the dial of his watch, and his lips were ready to pronounce the fatal word. The spirit of insubordination was growing weak in the presence of a power that held life and death at will. A few seconds more and my two stokers broke from the gang and came aft, and they came not alone. Through the gap thus opened others followed—followed in a continuous line—until the forecastle was vacant. Every man had reported for duty.

Porter put up his watch and stepped down.

"Captain," and he, as he came upon the quarter-deek. "I have an order for you, and I will assume all responsibility in event of its execution. The first man of your crew who refuses to do duty, shoot him on the spot."

But our Captain had no call for turning his pistol against his own man. They had discovered what mutiny really meant, and had no desire to experiment therein sgaln—at least while the broad pennant of Commodure Porter was in sight.

NIPPING A MUTINY.

Our gunboat lay in the Mississippi, attached to Porter's flotilla, and I was acting as chief engineer. Our Captain was a volunteer officer, an excellent sailor and a brave man, and if he had a fault it was that of over-indulgence to his crew. Said crew was a motley collection, made up almost entirely of rivermen -flatboatmen, raftsmen, anding porters and 'iongshoremen of all dinds-and too many of them were of a disposition to take advantage of kindness. They had no conception of duty, save that which was forced upon them, and they had svidently shipped with the impression that they would have but little work and little

We were on the eve of stirring events. Word had come to us that we were to run the eries of Vicksburg; and we knew there ''I know it—I know it," he said, nervously.

Gulf. One morning, upon going to the fire-room, I found that two of the stokers, who should have been on duty, were absent; and, upon making mquiry, I heard that they had refused to do any more work. I called them to me, and asked what they meant. One of them—an ili-favored fellow, who had shipped at New Orleans—answered me that his time was out, and that he wanted his discharge. I informed him that, according to the rules of war, he must continue to do his duty until his discharge was received. He laughed at me, and said he would like to see me make him work after his time was out. I observed that quite a number of the crew had followed my stokers to the door of the fire-room; and, from the glances which were exchanged, I was satisfied that the defection was not confined to my department. I sought the Captain and told him what had

"Nearly half the crew have refused to do further duty, and demand to be paid off and set on shore. They have not yet spoken with me, but I expect them every moment."

While we were conversing, the officer of the dack came into the cabin, and informed the Captain that a number of the crew had assembled in the gangway, and demanded to see him. He rose, buckled on his sword and went out. It the starboard gangway were about forty of the men, headed by a stout, burly, dark-visaged fellow named Bassard. He was a bully and a blackleg. As the Captain approached this man stepped forward, and said he had been chosen to speak for his companions. He wanted it understood that there was no particular leader in this business; but that the terms of enlistment of forty-two of the men had expired, and they desired to be paid off and set on shore.

The Captain spoke to them at first very moderately. He explained to them what were the rules of war. He told them that the more expirations of a given time could not absolve an enlisted man from his allegance. Any oven opposition to constituted authority before they were regularly discharged would be mutiny; and if such mutiny could not be quelled, the afficiency of the service would the service would.

The men treated his appeal with scorn and contempt, and swore that they would do no ontempt, and swore that they would be near they were about forty of the men headed by a stout, burly, dark-visaged fellow named Bassard.

The men treated his appeal with scorn and contempt, and swore that they would do no ontempt, and swore that they would not be seen that they meant what they said. They were despended to them was not power enough on board to overcome them. As I have said, they constituted nearly haif the crew; and the bene was not power enough on board to overcome them. As I have said, they constituted nearly haif the crew; and the bene was not power enough on the first they want to the men what they want to be depended upon to resist them with a rule; and the haif to haif was power to on board during the afteernoon and see if I can straighten things out for you."

After this the Commodore turned the conversation upon other subjects, and when we had eaten, and smoked our pipes, we returned to our vessel.

And Commodore Porter was not far behind us. At 2 o'clock he came on board, accompanied by a lieuter ant and twenty marines. His first move was to direct the crew to be mustered aft; and while this was being done the marines were drawn up on the starboard side of the quarter-deck in two ranks—the crew mustering upon the opposite side. When all was quiet the Commodore advanced from his position against the taffrail and addressed our men.

"Look ye, ny men," he said, in his abrupt, authoritative way, "I am informed that some of you refuse to do duty. You know very well that you can't be discharged to-day. The thing is impossible, and the good of the service will not permit that you shall refuse to obey your officers. As the roll is called those who are not willing to do further duty will, in answer to their names, go forward to the forecastle. The others will remain as they are."

chief.

The Commodore caused the marines to be drawn up across the waist, facing forward; and when this had been done, he ascended the gangway ladder, and turned towards the mutineers.

"Now, my men, I want you to return to your duty. Those who are willing to do so may lay aft.— Marines, attention! Ready! Aim!"

The marines cocked their rifies, and brought them to their shoulders, the muzzles
